Case Study

Homicide/Podcast

Origin was contacted by the family of Adea Shabani, a 25-year-old woman who went missing in Hollywood two days earlier. Origin immediately dedicated investigative and analyst resources to supplement LAPD's existing investigation.

While the case was initially treated as a general missing person case by LAPD, Origin investigators quickly uncovered evidence supporting the fact that Shabani's disappearance was involuntary and that her boyfriend, Chris Spotz, may have been involved.

During the course of the investigation, Origin conducted physical surveillance of Spotz in Los Angeles and suburban Denver documenting numerous inconsistencies in his story. Origin investigators consistently relayed information to the LAPD homicide detectives and were instrumental in determining the location of Shabani's body and the manner of death. Spotz committed suicide in Riverside County while returning to Los Angeles from Colorado.

Origin investigators eventually gained access to Spotz's digital footprint and determined the exact timeline of Shabani's disappearance and the purchase of the murder weapon and eventual murder by Spotz.

Origin provided media representation on local news in Los Angeles, CNN, Fox News, and other nationally syndicated talk shows. This case was also documented on the award-winning true crime podcast To Live and Die in LA.

DUI

Origin was contacted by a law firm whose client was involved in a high risk driving under the influence case due to multiple prior offenses. The San Bernardino-based client was stopped at an intersection waiting on a red light. When the light turned green, the client proceeded through the intersection, but lost control due to his intoxication and drove through a private property gasoline station. The client nearly collided with several pedestrians, but after avoiding them, his vehicle rolled over and was left at rest, upside down and he was unconscious.

The client conducted field sobriety tests with the officers and was compliant with their requests. Due to the client's several prior offenses, he was booked for felony driving under the influence. Additionally, the client's license was sent to the California Department of Motor Vehicles for a suspension hearing. This charge carries significant weight in sentencing, up to three years and several thousand dollars.

Origin's investigative team was able to quickly obtain additional facts about the investigation which pivoted the conclusion of this case. Origin's experienced DUI team was able to determine that there were administrative requirements that were not completed during the arresting process which allowed for the client to retain his driving license through the DMV hearing.

Origin's experience team reviewed the arresting officer's body camera footage and was able to determine that the officer that made the arrest missed key requirements when conducting the field sobriety tests and handling blood evidence.

Origin's investigation was critical in getting the case dismissed and protecting the rights of the client.

Case Study

Civil Becomes Criminal

Origin was contacted by a law firm whose client was considering civil litigation related to a failed business transaction. The Los Angeles-based client had agreed to purchase nine luxury vehicles from a wholesaler located in Texas for a sum in excess of $1mm. After the funds were transferred, the vehicles were never delivered to the buyer.

Origin investigators were able to determine the current location of the vehicles using DMV registration information and automated license plate reader (ALPR) data. Through additional investigation, it was discovered that the seller had sold the vehicles fraudulently to multiple parties and had also defrauded several manufacturer finance companies by using straw buyers to avoid import/export regulations.

Origin's investigative team quickly developed additional facts to strengthen the client's pending civil case, but also determined criminal activity had occurred. Origin worked with local law enforcement in Los Angeles and Texas, as well as the FBI to conclude the investigation and bring criminal charges against the fraudulent seller.

Origin investigators used their knowledge of federal and state criminal codes and law enforcement connections to transform what appeared to be only a civil case to a criminal case. As a result, the fraudulent seller, facing federal felony charges, quickly settled the monetary claim with the defrauded buyer.

Case Study

Financial Due Diligence

Origin was contacted by a law firm whose client, a wealthy private investor, was considering a multi-million dollar partnership with a biotechnology firm based in Mexico. Origin was asked to conduct due diligence on the target firm and business principles.

Origin investigators were provided with marketing collateral and other documentation supporting the business operations and assets. Initially, investigators requested business formation documents from Mexican authorities and conducted research-based due diligence in the individual representing the business to the investor.

Investigators immediately found inconsistencies with the reported ownership structure as described by the representative and the documents provided by the Mexican government. Furthermore, Origin analysts discovered that the representative was affiliated with dozens of newly formed and previously failed business entities in the United States.

At the direction of the client, Origin investigators accompanied the client to Mexico to inspect purported facilities operated by the biotechnology firm. During the time of the client's inspection, the primary facility was teeming with activity, personnel, and equipment. However, Origin investigators who had been conducting surveillance for several days prior to the inspection uncovered the fact that the facility had been completely non-operational prior by bus from a nearby [unrelated] facility. Likewise, the facility was again dormant for several days after the inspection.

Origin provided its full investigative report, including photos and video of the facility, to the client who did not proceed with the investment.
